Eating

Heilongjiang's cuisine is a culinary distillation of the white mountains and black waters, and its diverse culture. A goose stewed in an iron pot in the cold winter evokes the battlefield warmth of the Battle of Yaksa, simmered over a wood fire, evoking the heroic spirit of the Heilongjiang people. Demoli fish stew, made with live fish from the Songhua River and tofu and vermicelli noodles, is cooked on earthen stoves in riverside fishing villages to create a simple, fresh, and delicious dish.

Harbin red sausage and braised beef in a pot carry the exotic lingering influence of the Middle East Railway, while the pig-killing dish evokes the homely flavors of family reunions. The meticulous practice of savoring the soup before eating the fish, or the casual use of both knife and fork and chopsticks, all reflect the Heilongjiang people's welcoming and inclusive spirit.

◆ Sweet and Sour Pork 锅包肉

Sweet and sour pork, created by the Harbin Daotai Mansion, is crispy on the outside and tender on the inside, sweet and sour, and golden and bright like art. When you bite into it, the "crunch" sound hides the boldness and ingenuity of the Northeast.

◆ Harbin Red Sausage 哈尔滨红肠

This Lithuanian delicacy, brought by the Middle East Railway, is smoked over century-old fruit wood to a jujube-red hue. The meat is firm, and the aroma of garlic and smoke blends beautifully, giving you a taste of both Eastern and Western influences from the Ice City.

◆ Demoli Fish Stew 得莫利炖鱼

Live fish from the Songhua River, served with tofu and vermicelli noodles, is simmered over a wood fire to create a rich, flavorful broth. This delicacy, originating from a fishing village, embodies the warmth of the Heilongjiang people and the local flavors of northern China.

◆ Pig-Killing Dishes 杀猪菜

Black soil cellar-aged sauerkraut is slow-cooked with fresh pork, its sour aroma enveloping the freshness of the meat, seeping into the bones. This must-have dish for the New Year, brimming with the hearty spirit of Northeastern Chinese people, warms the coldest winters.

◆ Iron Pot Stewed Goose 铁锅炖大鹅

The iron pot simmers over the wood stove, the goose meat stewed to a tender and flavorful consistency, the vermicelli noodles soaked in the broth go perfectly with rice. A sip of the warm soup reveals the Northeastern people's boldness and winter warmth.

◆ Flying Dragon Soup 飞龙汤

The Flying Dragon Bird from the Greater Khingan Mountains is slowly stewed in a clear broth to lock in its original flavor. The broth is clear and refreshing. This traditional delicacy embodies the gifts of the northern mountains and the sincerity of hospitality.

◆ Wuchang Rice 五常大米

The black soil of Wuchang, Heilongjiang, holds millennia of natural nutrients, while clear springs from a tributary of the Songhua River nourish the rice fields. The temperature swings between day and night allow the rice to accumulate a sweet aroma. After spring sowing and autumn harvest, farmers meticulously grind and refine the rice, transforming it into plump, white grains.

After cooking, the rice is fragrant, its grains glossy, soft, and glutinous, leaving a lingering sweetness. This bowl of rice embodies the richness of northern China and the ingenuity of farmers. Every bite is a pure, mellow gift from nature.
